Moesa Valleys

If you drive through the valley on the motorway you can't get a true feeling of the intimate beauty of the Moesa valleys. From the car, the sheer rock faces are certainly impressive and you will marvel at the waterfalls which cascade noisily down to the valley floor, but to really experience the true character of the region you should break your journey and discover the bounties that nature has blessed this area with. Dense forests clad the mountain-sides concealing networks of paths that are a veritable Alpine hiker's playground.

The luxuriant vegetation also provides a beautiful setting for more relaxing walks along the river banks where the constant silvery sound of water rushing between the rocks contrasts with the silent majesty of castles, ancient ruins and lookout towers.

For centuries Moesa have been popular transit routes for travellers moving between north and south and an excellent way to discover them is on the old railway line which runs between the small factories that dot the valley floor or along the ancient paths used by smugglers in the past. There at the confluence of the River Moesa with the River Ticino you can start out on a journey full of contrasts: ancient chapels containing splendid art treasures and modern churches perched high up on the mountainsides seem to greet each other from ridge to ridge. A labyrinth of roads and narrow streets and numerous cableways lead up to small villages clinging tenaciously to the mountainsides, awakening the long lost emotions of rural life. Gliders sweep up from the valley floor like birds of metal, winging their way up to one of the most famous passes in Europe: the San Bernadino, where residential tourism makes for a lively atmosphere, snow-clad slopes abound for the joy of skiers and Alpine lakes provide a cool and restful spot in which to relax.

This region, which has so much to offer, is also renowned for its fine foods and local specialities include cheeses, salami, wild mushrooms and game. A warm welcome awaits you in the Moesa Valleys.
